Pre-application of FP7/8 mAb could potentially be a promising strategy to limit the emergence of these mutations and improve the chances of positive outcomes. Moreover, it could be applied in conjunction with anti-amyloid strategies that target APP proteolysis and other pathways.^[@R52]^ One of the common studied risk factors for AD is the APOE-ε4 allele.^[@R53]^ Interestingly, in vitro, we observed that FP7/8 mAb does not have an effect on Aβ production in APOE-ε4 cells. The same result was obtained with anti-Aβs. These results corroborate the preclinical data that FP7/8 is able to penetrate the brain, bind to Aβ aggregates in the brain of transgenic AD model mice and reduce amyloid pathology in mouse brains.^[@R35]^ Anti-Aβ mAb therapy is one of the current promising treatments for AD, but its mechanisms of action are still unclear.^[@R54]^ One of the inhibitors of FP7/8-Aβ has been investigated as a possible treatment for AD. This inhibitory effect may be due to the microglia-mediated clearance of Aβ aggregates.^[@R55]^ The microglia could bind to FP7/8 and facilitate the clearance of Aβ aggregates, leading to downregulation of the APP-cleaving enzyme BACE1 and reduced Aβ production. Moreover, FP7/8 increases the expression of
