Main Interface: Update: Hacking is in, right now! I have no idea about website creation but after changing my screen-name to BITE_ME[h4ck3r], so if you like to join in as a hacker, a good place to start is from the bugs.php page. If you want to create your own room, just search for existing rooms, then create your own by clicking the '#new' button. Just make sure to read the whole room description. Hope you have fun! Leave a comment for me saying what you think about this hack.This really should be an easy sell for former U.S. national teamer and assistant Don Garber, who is former MLS Commissioner and FIFA President Joseph S. Blatter's right-hand man. The Boston-based NFL has been in constant search of an expansion franchise since the league announced it was going to be leaving the fall-back option of playing a home season in Washington to play a balanced schedule in all three time zones. The NFL favors markets with a population of between 2 million and 6 million people. Indy was announced as the new city, and things didn't exactly get off to a great start with a bumbling grand opening ceremony with the NFL commissioner, who repeatedly referred to the $1 billion stadium as "Gillette Stadium" instead of Colts Stadium, er, Arrowhead Stadium. The NFL is going to be bigger than soccer on the field, and that means it has to be bigger than soccer in the stands, too. Don Garber knows that. He must know that. And he should know that the people of Indianapolis are ready for the NFL just as they are ready for the Indy 500. Is soccer going to dominate next month's game? Not even close. Football is where the money is in America. People will watch the game. That's it. But, yeah, Indianapolis is a great city to host an NFL game. It has the right incentives, too, with all that tax-incentive money coming in to support the facility. As for the other new city, San Antonio? Well, the NBA already has a team. An NBA game will be played at the AT&T Center every year. The NFL is going to be growing. It has to. It's a professional league. It's a multi-billion-dollar league. It's going to grow.
