In order to automate your daily work, KEYMACRO enables you to use simple key sequences to invoke macro functions. The application is able to store key combinations and trigger them automatically when a specific condition is met. Currently, KEYMACRO allows you to create key combinations that can be triggered using the Windows key, the Alt key and the Ctrl key, as well as combinations that use the Numlock key and the Capslock key. The currently supported methods to activate a key combination are direct invocation, triggers and events. Keyboard macros can be created using the KEYMACRO editor window and used through a keyboard driver, which is installed as an ActiveX component and uses Windows.KEYMACRO to trigger macros. The application can capture keyboard events and also has a monitoring function that enables you to detect certain key sequences and monitor the state of the keyboard (Numlock or Capslock, etc.). Keyboard macros are widely used to automate simple tasks, such as bookkeeping, e-mail composition, data entry and report generation. KEYMACRO also has an event-triggered macro manager that allows you to create complex macros for more demanding tasks. In order to add or edit macros, you need to create the macro definition file (.DEF) that contains all the macro data. You can select between three different file extensions (.MD,.DEL,.DOC) to specify the way you want to store macros: through a file, through the Registry or through the clipboard. Keyboard macros can be set to be triggered automatically or on demand. Once a macro is defined, you can edit it directly in the.DEF file or specify the target application to be used. You can also create event-triggered macros. To invoke the macro, you can use the keyboard driver to send the sequence you want to generate (one keyboard macro is equal to one keystroke). This way you don't have to memorize key combinations or key sequences and can save time. KEYMACRO can also use a specific keyboard driver to launch a specific application. For example, you can use the driver to launch Notepad, WordPad or Paint or to change the desktop wallpaper. In this case, the macro will always be triggered when a specific key combination is used, regardless of the context. This mechanism is very useful for applications that have different key combinations, such as PDF viewers or viewers for photos. KEYMACRO is able to export and import macros from external applications such as Notepad or WordPad, from an
